FRENCH CONVERSATION II

FALL TERM 2008

A COURSE TAUGHT IN FRENCH

By Distinguished University Professor GAËTAN BRULOTTE, Native Speaker

An upper-level undergraduate course. Meets two times a week for 75 minute-sessions. Through real conversations in French on various subjects and tones (from the sad, serious and cynical to the humorous and controversial, this course proposes a revision of French practical vocabulary and oral syntax.

The focus being essentially on ORAL French, this course is aimed to give students the opportunity to carry on free and spontaneous conversations about everyday things of interest to them; to improve their listening habits and educate their hearing of fluent French; to improve their oral expression skills (lexical, syntactical, emotional levels); to help students overcome the psychological barriers commonly encountered in speaking a foreign language; to encourage as much practice as possible and to create total freedom of expression in a student-centred atmosphere (and NOT instructor-centred) so that students react, talk, express opinions, exchange ideas, become involved in asking questions and giving conversational cues while the professor acts as moderator and language consultant.

Another objective of the course is to appreciate the differences between French and Americans, and other Francophone cultures as well, since the socio-cultural aspects are part of any language acquisition. Importance will be given, through a continuous comparative approach between the cultures, to the silent language that accompanies the spoken words such as the body language (gestures and mimics), the proxemics (the distance, the touching), the perception of time and space (for example, what a shut or an open door means in one culture and in another), the different use or meaning of cultural practices such as small talk, silences, jokes, private versus public, critical opinions openly allowed or not, behavior in crowds (in waiting lines, for example), etc. All these details can not be separated from foreign language acquisition and help create the bridge to a broader cultural understanding.
